BACKGROUND INFORMATION: WestEd helps schools that fail to meet state or federal achievement goals. To close the achievement gap in these under-performing schools, WestEd employs a three-part strategy: First, the program helps schools, their districts, and those who work with them plan, implement, and refine research-based, comprehensive school improvement efforts. Second, through publications, television programs, journal articles, and conference presentations, the organization contributes to a growing knowledge base of how low-performing schools can improve student achievement. Finally, the program brings together research and practical experience to inform policymakers at all levels as they make critical decisions designed to ensure all students succeed academically.
